Course Descriptions:

This laboratory course assists the student to apply knowledge of community resources to the care of childbearing/childrearing families. There is a special emphasis on the understanding of cultural influences on health practices and beliefs within the family.

Learning Outcomes that will be addressed by the completion of this course is # 6, #10:

Describe how natural systems function and recognize the impact of humans on the environment.
Create strategies that can be used to fulfill personal, civic, and social responsibilities.

The student will be able to demonstrate knowledge pertaining to health issues relating to childbearing/childrearing families with emphasis in:

1. Identification of two (2) problems within the community that directly affect the health of childbearing/childrearing families as a result of environmental issues.
2. Development of strategies to overcome the identified problems.
3. Definition of Environment Sustainability and discuss ways to be environmentally sustainable.
